1. The Commission on the Status of Women in the United States was established in 1975 to study and report on the status of women in the United States.
The Commission was composed of representatives from various government departments and agencies, as well as representatives from the private sector and academic institutions. The Commission's report, "The Status of Women in the United States," was published in 1976 and provided a comprehensive overview of the issues facing women in the United States at that time. The report identified key areas of concern, such as employment, pay equity, and family responsibilities, and recommended specific actions to address these issues. The Commission's work was instrumental in shaping public policy and promoting the advancement of women in the United States.
