The Court finds and concludes that the seventy-five (75) acre tract of land therefore has access to such public road and that such access roadway constitutes an easement appurtenant to said property; that is to say, an easement running with the land, and further finds and concludes that the plaintiffs and the class which they represent and their heirs and assigns are entitled to the full use of said roadway and they are further entitled to have an order from this Court requiring the defendants to remove any and all obstructions across, along and over said roadway which might in any way hinder the unrestricted use of said roadway by the plaintiffs, the class they represent, and their heirs and assigns. The Court further finds and concludes that the plaintiffs, the class they represent, and their heirs and assigns are also entitled to an order of this court requiring the said defendants from blocking said roadway or interfering in any manner or fashion with the full and unrestricted use thereof by the plaintiffs, they class they represent, and their heirs and assigns.
